Game 10 December 1009

The Lascivii have at last attacked the Savage Intent, but in a surprise move it was not where we expected. The attack was a Naval strike on the fleet of the Savage Intent in the waters known as the Eriut Sea. A fleet numbering Four Medium Galleys armed with ballista and carrying Marines moved into the sea area, but instead of engaging the Savage Intent fleet, they ran into a Savage Intent light galley flotilla of two ships. This was a screening force of the smaller Savage Intent Fleet, and once warned, the defenders medium units made for safety, leaving the light galleys to their fate. One light galley was sunk by ballista and another was boarded and captured, but the bilk of the savage Intent fighting ships made it to safety.

Jason's Bit

A naval battle at last. The interesting thing here for me was the evidence that armies and fleets need light forces attached to them to act as intelligence gatherers and to warn of an enemy presence. In the case of Savage Intent, their fleet was saved because of the lighter units, even if they had to be sacrificed. The same is true of armies.

Anyway, I hope you all had a great Christmas and I look forward to Gming for you into next year which I hope will be a great one for you all.

Regards Jason.
