Grey Dawn Forces Advance Upon PdU Lands Stiff Resistance from Defenders

Following the defeat of the N.U.D.E. at their base village of Chioco the Grey Dawn Faction and its ally from the West, Black Flag have advanced Northward up the road network mopping up resistance at Qetrada but meeting heavy resistance at Tuchatro where the Molteni have recently taken over the defence. Grey Dawn forces attacked the village but found it heavily defended by the Molteni who were well dug into the ruins of this most fought over of villages. Black Flag attacked also but the Molteni forces held firm, boosted in the knowledge that their aircraft had destroyed a large convoy of units based at Albeagra and poised ready to join the attack. A Black Flag probe was also defeated at Bridpo when an outflanking manoeuvre was attempted. This might give the PdU the breathing space it needs to recover from the recent heavy fighting in support of the N.U.D.E. Faction where losses were heavy and combat supply and weapons expenditure were extravagant.

At the northern Border the Electronic Base Commandos (EBC) are still attacking villages controlled by Creeping Death. Varma was attacked by a platoon sized force but was repulsed in torrential rain, while further East the Creeping Death forces won another defensive victory against the EBC forces at Selbera, where it seems the CD have rushed forces Westwards to meet this new threat. Strategically they appear to have abandoned any attempt to capture El Baso from Government Forces after their disastrous failure a few months ago.

A defeated faction thought to be no longer in action have actually carried out a probe on the Molteni base at Lojas. The Sons of Minerva long ago subjugated by the South West Alliance seems to have re-emerged after the Alliance were drawn into the heavy fighting following the Grey Dawn intervention several months ago. Although the probe was defeated by superior firepower of the defenders including a tank, it reveals the risk of leaving fragments of shattered factions behind while you address a higher priority.

Another Northern faction has been in action this month with the Centre of Internal Aggression (CIA) securing the village of Jebrat. The village only lightly defended by Government Forces controls the river crossing and the roads South to the mountains and beyond them the oil rich areas of desert. We anticipate that they will exploit this strategic and very cheap gain in the near future in a bid capture and secure economic security. The logistics of making this a worthwhile exercise are expensive and complex without a nearer border crossing.

Jason's Bit

Another busy month with plenty of fighting across the map. I'm impressed by the quality of play as well as the tenacity of some players.

The promised turn assistance programme has absorbed much of my time for many months and I am overcoming each challenge as it arises while learning more and more about how best to do things. It will count up everything in your load and compare it with the available transport and compute combat supplies need for each battle. I am sure it will make a huge difference when I get it finished. To speed things up I will be making a few changes to unit stats particularly to increase the amount of cargo that APCs can carry as this has proved to be a major problem. I hope this does not inconvenience anyone.

Anyway, that's it for another month.

Regards Jason.
